Q: How do I get started with phone sex? -- DB

A: First you have to get to know your phone. Compliment it and make it feel special. Then, when it starts to respond, stroke its receiver a little. Pick the receiver up and caress it. At this point you might want to try talking dirty to it. Kiss the mouthpiece. Lick the earpiece. Phones like that. Now try punching a few buttons. Slowly at first, so it doesn't get skittish. When you hear the purring through the earpiece, you know you're on the right track. If it's really turned on, it will probably respond with "hello?" or something similar. Now's the time to make your move. Breathe heavily into the mouthpiece. Say something nasty. Don't be put off if the response sounds negative, you've made it this far, the phone is probably being coy. If the noises from the other end keep coming, say something else. Tell the phone that you're naked and have a rutabaga shoved up your poop hole. When you hear a loud crack from the other end, you know the phone is close. Keep up the talk. Lick it. Kiss it. Soon you'll be rewarded with a bleating buzz tone, signifying the phone's release into sexual ecstasy. Gently lay the receiver back into the cradle and curl up around it. Congratulations, you've just had sex with your phone. Next time you might want to introduce a little variety. Invite the toaster to your ménage. Or better yet, the blender. Phones love blenders. Mmmm...

Q: I'm just not feeling it for my boyfriend anymore but we have a place together. The sex is okay, but I could use more. There's also this other person that I like. I don't think I want to be with this other person, I think it's more like I just want freedom and time to myself. I would feel guilty if I left my boyfriend but I really want to experience more. What should I do? -- Bunny

A: Okay, one of two things are happening here. Either you're a nymphomaniac, who can never find pleasure with just one man, or you're a lesbian and the "other person" is a woman who really turns you on. Either way, you need to get the hell out of the trailer park and find some sweet sugar daddy who will put up with your incessant whining in exchange for watching you get it on with other women.

Q: How effective is using the pill and a condom together? -- Cliff A: Depends on what you're using them for. I'm guessing they'd make a dandy slingshot...

The First Sex Store in the Muslim World

MANAMA, Bahrain - BY FREDERIK RICHTER

Where does one buy lingerie, sex toys and ointments designed to enhance female sexual pleasure in a Gulf region which frowns on open displays of sexuality?

From a lady in a traditional headscarf, of course.

Khadija Ahmed's sex shop has survived against all odds and some particularly intense scrutiny from customs officials since it opened in Bahrain in 2008. Ahmed's shop, a rare sight in the region, sells a wide range of lingerie, creams to delay male orgasm and sex toys out of the tiny Khadija Fashion House south of Manama or through her website to customers across the region.

A modestly dressed Ahmed in a traditional flowing black abaya and headscarf told us that most of the items she sells are already available in Bahrain's fashion shops and pharmacies anyway and that she shuns some products to avoid stirring public anger. "I don't sell vibrators for example, as this is against Islam," she said, adding that her faith banned the replication or display of sensitive parts of the body. However, other toys such as vibration rings were fine, she said.

Ahmed said she has not encountered much trouble with the public in Bahrain once she replaced lingerie in her display window with short dresses after complaints from neighbors and a nearby mosque. Discussing and displaying sex in public is a taboo in most Middle Eastern countries, but Islamic scholars have also said that sex toys are legitimate if used by married couples. Bahrain is considered one of the more liberal countries in the Gulf, allowing the sale of alcohol in bars and designated shops. Saudis, Qataris and Kuwaitis flock to the island kingdom each weekend to enjoy its nightlife.

Ahmed's most recent challenge is an ongoing legal case over a complaint by a customs official. She often has trouble getting her shipments cleared through customs and once ran into a spot of trouble when an official refused to clear a shipment of massage tools and vibration rings.

"These are closed-minded people....or maybe they're just jealous," she said.

Ahmed, who says she is not aware of any similar shop in the region, says she has many customers from the United Arab Emirates and in deeply conservative Saudi Arabia. "Sometimes I personally go there with my brother to deliver, but only orders above 150 Bahraini dinars ($398)," she said. She is now considering opening branches in Dubai, Lebanon and one in one of Bahrain's shopping malls, as her store has grown too small to display all of her products on shelves.

Calvin Klein Obsession Really Catches the Cougars....

Biologists tracking jaguars in the Guatemalan jungle might smell nice but it's all in the name of science, with researchers finding the Calvin Klein cologne Obession for Men attracts big cats. Biologists Rony Garcia and Jose Moreira from the Wildlife Conservation Society's (WCS) Jaguar Conservation Program say they use hidden cameras as a primary source for observing and tracking jaguars in the Guatemala's Maya Biosphere Reserve.

But they also rely on Obsession for Men, a cologne known for its complex scent, to help lure then research and hopefully ultimately preserve jaguars in the Central American country. "The method we are using to study the jaguars here in Guatemala is an invasive method which is based on photographing the individuals by using camera traps," Moreira told Reuters Television.

"It has been very useful using Obsession (for Men) to get the jaguars in front of these camera traps ... and that allows us to estimate with greater confidence the genders and the numbers that live in each studied site."

The discovery that Obsession for Men acted as a magnet for jaguars was the result of an experiment by the WCS's Bronx Zoo in New York. The WCS was looking for ways to get cheetahs in front of camera traps, and, after several years of testing with different fragrances, found spraying the musky Obsession For Men near the heat-and-motion-sensitive cameras drew the cats for longer than other scents.

They also tried out about 23 other fragrances but Obsession for Men kept the cats' attention for longest with Nina Ricci's L'Air du Temps coming second.

The practice made it's way down to Guatemala, where Garcia and Moreira said they have been recording similar success in the wild since 2007, allowing them to track jaguars and even record their mating rituals. Garcia said the results will be invaluable to conservation efforts. "These camera traps help us to identify how many jaguars are living in this area ... (and) helps us to have control over the population and let's us say to the government, to the public, that Laguna del Tigre still deserves conservation," he said. The WCS said it tentatively plans to expand the use of the cologne in programs in Venezuela, Nicaragua, Bolivia, Peru and Ecuador in coming years.

DiD you know???

The George Washington Bridge, which spans the Hudson River in New York, is three feet longer on the hottest days of summer than it is in the middle of a cold winter.

While summer temperatures here can regularly get above 110 degrees, the hottest day ever recorded in Britain was 98.2 degrees, which occurred in Surrey on August 9, 1911.

Somewhere between 16 and 25% or people have what's called a photoc sneeze reflex, which means they sneeze whenever they are in bright sunlight.

You watch MTV's Remaking: Vanilla Ice, in the hopes that just hearing Ice Ice Baby will make you feel cooler.

- You give yourself a Slurpee enema.
- You become sexually aroused when you think about Dairy Queen.
- You've sat through The Longest Yard three times just for the air conditioning.
- You ask your doctor to check your prostate with a Popsicle.
- For one brief, insane moment, you actually wished you lived in Canada.
- You call the morgue to see what they charge to spend the night on a refrigerated slab.
- You have six pounds of frozen veal cutlets sewn into your boxers.
- 2 "Is that a Sno-Cone in your Speedo or are you happy to see me?"
- Suddenly, necrophilia makes a lot of sense to you.

You like being tied up. Watching someone peel out of leather is a real turn-on. Receiving enemas makes your knees week. Unfortunately, finding that certain someone to share in your kinky pursuits isn't so easy to pin down. Don't give up, it may not be as hopeless as it seems.

First Consider the Percentages.

- According to the Kinsey studies "Sexual Behavior In The Human Male" (1948) and "Sexual Behavior In The Human Female" (1953), 11% of the population is interested in trying SM and 25% of those surveyed reported erotic responses to being bitten during sex.
- Researchers Janus and Janus reported, in "The Janus Report On Sexual Behavior" (1993), that 18% of men and 12% of women surveyed agreed with the statement "pain and pleasure go together during sex."
- A recent study by the San Francisco Chronicle found that 25% of the adults in this country have experimented with bondage of some sort.

If these reports are to be believed, and there's no reason why they shouldn't, approximately 18 - 20% of the population at large is currently interested in some form of alternative sexual behavior. That means that something like one out of every five people you meet on a regular basis harbors some kind of secret desire not unlike your own.

Of course, that's a pretty general statement.

Obviously there's more to it than that because everybody's got his or her own level of kink tolerance. Some find simple spanking pretty kinky, but they wouldn't go much beyond that. Others wouldn't really be satisfied unless whips, chains and ball bearings were involved. And would a man who wants to be dominated be satisfied with a woman who gets off on sweaty briefs? Probably not, and that's where the real problem begins.

Approximately 18 - 20% of the population at large is currently interested in some form of
sexual behavior.

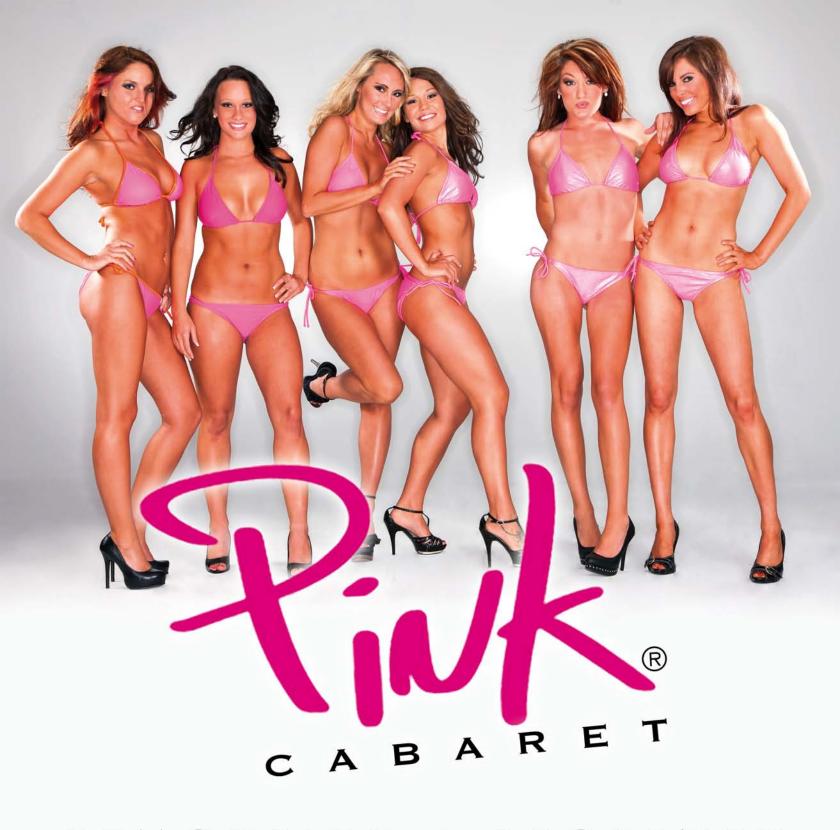

The answers of where to find that ideal mate are few, but they do exist. First, you could just do it the old fashioned way: dating. At some point in every relationship (usually the second date if you're lucky) the topic of sex will come up. That's the time to discuss what you're interested in and what you expect from your partner. If he or she runs screaming into the night, it may be a sign that this person just wasn't right for you and you'll have to start over Another solution is the Internet. There are plenty of bulletin boards out there with very specific goals in mind. If you're interested in shaping balloon animals while making love on the back of a llama dressed in black leather (either you or the llama) there's more than likely a board in existence with you in mind. The problem there, however, is that your llamahumping, balloon-shaping daddy may be a resident of some faraway Polynesian island, or worse, New Jersey. The chances that he or she will be close enough for you to arrange a meeting are about as slim as the waves your message of love is riding upon.

A final solution would be to look up your local BDSM Community. You're bound to find people of like minds here, but be aware that anyone who is open enough to join a "club" catering to their tastes, probably isn't going to be a person of pronounced subtleties. Riding that llama may be all he or she may want to do, whether you've got the place to yourself or your visiting elderly aunt Marge from Minnesota is in the next room.

If all of this seems rather disappointing, don't despair. Consider it a challenge of your unique position. They say there's someone out there for everyone. Sharpening your technique in looking will only make you a better person when it comes to the negotiations. These are just a few options open to you. If they don't work you could always try the direct approach, "So, how do you feel about balloon animals?" could be a nice icebreaker. It's really all in how you look at it when kink is the name of the game.

FISTING... Is It Pleasure of Pain?

I already know what fisting is, and have even seen it done in a few DVD's. My question isn't so much about how to do it, my question is more, why? I'm always anxious to try anything new and pleasurable, but I'm not certain that getting a fist in my pussy would be pleasurable, and I certainly don't want to be driven to the emergency room with some guy's arm stuck in my snatch. Any ideas on the pleasure quotient, and any safety tips?

- Lisa H.

You do know, Lisa, that babies' heads come out of there, so, anatomically, humans' are able to stretch those orifices more than you think. There is anal fisting and vaginal fisting. Since your question seems to only address vaginal fisting, we'll cover anal in some future issue. First thing, let's update the terminology a bit.

It's probably impossible for me to answer the part of your question regarding pleasure, since individual preferences are pretty...well...individual. Those who enjoy fisting, find it an intensely intimate and sensual experience, since it displays a huge degree of trust in your partner. And it fulfills the desire that many people have to push the limits of their own physicality and sexuality, resulting in a new sense of empowerment. It also provides an intense rush of excitement and thrill of emotion.

Having said all that, the easier part of your questions concerns safety. There is nothing unsafe about either vaginal or anal fisting, providing a few precautions are observed. The first thing you want to have on-hand is lots and lots of lube. Experiment with this, as you want a water-based lubricant that will not damage latex, and one that will not dry prematurely. Reports are that K-Y Jelly, for example, dries quickly and becomes sticky, which is NOT what you want.

You'll also want to reserve plenty of time. Fisting is a very slow process, and cannot be rushed. Be certain your partner has clean hands and trimmed nails. A latex glove should be used, not only as a precaution against transfer of bacteria or viruses, but also because the latex will slide in and out far easier than human skin will.

You partner will want to start with his hand palm up. bringing his fingers and thumb together to form something that looks like a duck bill. With massaging, and possibly gentle twisting motions, he'll slowly push his hand into your vagina. Continue a slow and steady push, and once all four fingers are inserted past the third knuckle, the hand will almost automatically turn into a fist. Once you start, you need to communicate any discomfort or pain, and your partner must immediately stop what he's doing. Let him know that he is NOT to pull his hand out if your vagina begins to contract, but should wait until the muscles are again relaxed, and then very slowly withdraw his hand. Everything must be done in slow motion so that your body can respond, and your partner must take all the cues you give to him.

I suggest you read Deborah Addington's book A Hand in the Bush: The Fine Art of Vaginal Fisting for a lot more information. In the meantime, lube up and go slowly, and you should have an enjoyable experience.

Nipple Pinching.... Good or BAD?!?

I was watching a fairly mainstream porn DVD the other day, which contained a small amount of bondage. One of the things that took me by surprised was the use of clothespins in some fairly sensitive areas; a woman had about six clamped to her pussy and a guy had about a dozen hanging off his balls. Is this common, and is there any chance of getting slivers from the wood? - Jeff L.

If you're main worry is slivers, maybe this isn't the activity for you, Jeffy. Like hot candle wax, clothespins can produce a limited amount of pleasurable pain, they're easy to apply and remove, and...perhaps most importantly...they are cheap and easy to find; thus their popularity. Despite your fear of wood slivers in your nutsack, wood clothespins are probably preferable for the beginner. The plastic ones have a bit firmer grip, and it's best to experiment with the old, large wooden variety first, and then move to plastic. If your level of pain tolerance really increases, there are tiny plastic pins that can really pack a whollop.

If you are clamping a clothespin to yourself or loved-one, and the grip is a little too much to bear, the spring can be altered to give less of a pinch either by opening the clothespin several times beyond its normal parameters or by rubber banding the legs in the open position for a day or two. Both methods will stretch the spring to some degree until you reach a level of clamping that's comfortable for you.

The opposite is also true. You can increase the amount of pressure being applied by decreasing the surface area of the end that clamps. This can be done by either decreasing the size of the area that actually touch when the pin is closed, or by inserting thumbtacks into the clamping area so that all the pressure is concentrated in a very small amount of space.

It's probably best to start with the nipples before moving on to clamping parts of your genitalia....just a suggestion. You can clamp just the nipple, or, for a more intense experience, clamp the skin around the nipple as well. Just like every other aspect of pain and pleasure, it's completely a matter of personal choice. Your partner will communicate what's best.

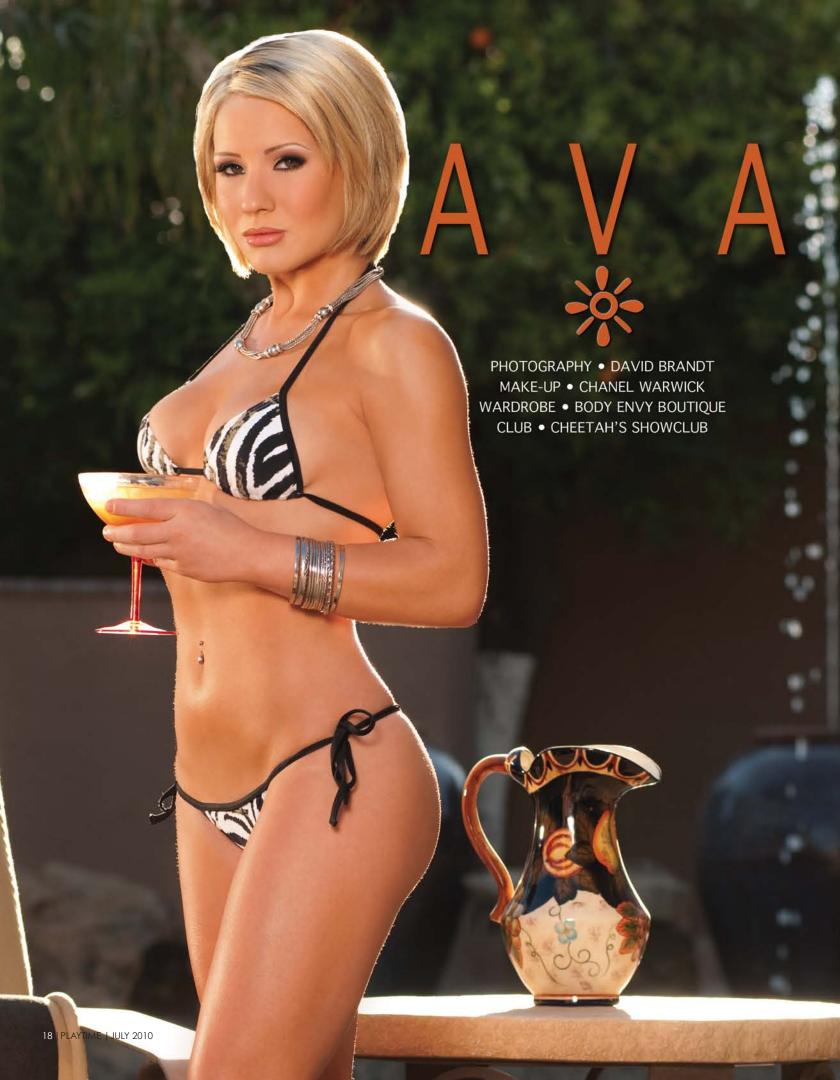

In removing the clamps, yanking them off will provide more pain than simply opening them and removing them. Some people prefer this sudden, intense feeling to the point where they make their own clothespin zippers. This is done by drilling holes in the legs of several clothespins and tying each one securely. Attach the clothespins to whatever part of the body you desire...although it may be best the first time to clamp them to your partner's stomach or back, and then yank the cord so that all the clothespins yank themselves off in succession. If you or your partner like that sensation, move on to other, more sensitive body parts and use the same method.

Experimentation is the not only the key, it's also an excellent time. Try varying the pressure of the clothespins, the amount of skin being clamped, the method of removal, the areas you're attaching the clothespins to. You'll find that this versatile little toy can be hours of inexpensive fun limited only by your imagination.

Stay DUI FREE & Get Your Drink On! With A Pub Crawl On The LIGHT RAIL

BY THE MISTAKEN GENIUS

Colckwise from Top

The Lost Leaf,

Riders on the Rail Makin Music.

The St. Francis Bar

The Original Wineburger

Isn't technological advancement grand? Since it's common knowledge that public transit in most cities seriously sucks, and certainly not in that good kind of way, anyone who has ever braved the endless supply of backwards ass freaks that permeate these often unreliable modes of public transportation has held out hope for a better future. Now that's not to say that each individual who rides the bus fits that derogatory description, just ask the SUV leasee who could ill afford to fuel their gas-guzzler when prices shot up to over $4.00 per gallon a few years ago, or anyone who has ever been popped off for a DUIzer, losing their driving privileges for obscene amounts of time. While they would likely speak of being inconvenienced, for a great many people this "last resort" is their only means of getting anywhere.

As if things weren't already bad enough, when the city and state economies went belly up along with the rest of the country and much of the world, some of the first at the local level to be bent over and forced to take it were those who rely on public transportation. Besides heavily cutting back on the frequency of bus stops per hour, early morning and late night runs were also needlessly nixed, leaving thousands of workers who don't subscribe to Dolly Parton's nine to five and desperately depend on those buses high and dry. When the expected backlash began soon thereafter, the cities in metro Phoenix surprisingly turned a deaf ear, essentially saying "tough shit...that's our only way to stay afloat." Definitely reassuring! Yet even in the midst of this contagious chaos there was still one shimmering light that shined through at the end of 2008, the belated debut of the LONG-DELAYED Metro Valley Light Rail, an inner city train system which hits all the hot spots starting in uptown Phoenix, moves south to the storied art districts downtown, then heads east through Tempe and Arizona State University before ending at the onset of Mesa just past the Loop 101 Freeway, leaving 20 miles of prime party property to explore along the tracks.

Every imperative improvement over public transit that came before it has been carefully crafted with bigger, faster and cleaner trains running efficiently every 15-20 minutes depending upon time of day, but most importantly much later than buses, capping off at midnight on weekdays and continuing east and west runs until 2am every weekend.

OU KNOW: AMERICANS SPEND APPROXIMATELY $25 BILLION EACH YEAR ON BEER.

This in turn becomes a safe haven for those who would prefer to kick a few back and not be forced to deal with rolling the dice behind the wheel, because even though drizzled driving is an acquired skill as with most difficult things in this life, its still just like playing Russian roulette, eventually your going to lose big. Instead, avoid a messy situation and assemble the most motley crew of zany amigos possible and head out on a crazy journey through the city.

To comprehend the sheer scope of the light rail system itself you must first experience it from end to end, in all of it's unique glory. Your journey should start at the northwestern end train station, currently located at the 19th Avenue and Montebello, that is until a future extension leads up into Glendale to rendezvous with ASU West, effectively easily linking all of the university's major campuses together so students jumping around taking classes have less to be stressed about. For now, the rail ends right beside Christown Mall, once a big time shopping center that was resuscitated after near death by morphing into a literal "land of the giants," housing big boys like Costco, Super Target and the almighty Walmart and cutting back on smaller, local businesses inside. If your can somehow resist the enormous store allure the best bet is to head two blocks north of the station to The Original Wineburger, a joint guaranteed to send a spark to the beginning of your evening. Do your best Man vs. Food impression and attempt to brave the 1 & 1/3 lb Angusaurus Rex Burger or sip back a savory selection of brews from the award winning Big Sky Brewing Co. from Montar feel safer in a more corporate setting there's still damn cheap pitchers of draft beer inside the Wingstop adjacent to the Christown food court that stays open until midnight and even drinks poured potent without hitting the pocketbook at a JB's of all places right across the street from the end station itself. Quite the pleasant surprise, indeed!

The first can't miss stop after pulling away from the main station is just minutes away at Central and Camelback in uptown Phoenix, the prime destination for all hipsters with slightly deeper pockets. Options are aplenty depending on your taste with East Valley Arcadia district transplant Postino Wine Cafe just north on central, chique bistro Maizies' just a block or so south, serving amazing weekend brunch with delicious egg pizzas and specials on mimosas and bloody marys, and a few stops later just before Indian School Road lies a longtime Valley favorite, British pub George & Dragon which has quickly become the quintessential spot to witness the FIFA World Cup, an international championship of soccer which occurs like the Olympics every four years and continues through the first two weeks of July. George apparently got so busy during a recent United States vs. England matchup to start the cup that people were refused service due to city fire codes, the only way to get in was for somebody else to leave. But if there is one place that must been seen before venturing into downtown Phoenix is the 1st Street and Camelback extraordinary eatery St. Francis. From the wide open mood that your dining at some exclusive restaurant on the beach to the delicious menu reflecting both Europe and the American Southwest, from seafood cioppino with shrimp, clams, mussels, white fish and tomato broth to brick oven chile verde with braised pork and homemade corn bread, this delicious food consumption will hopefully soak up some of the alcohol if you became a bit too heavy handed on the way thus far, because there is still much more to see.

Next up is the downtown art district that commands the attention from thousands of locals every First Friday of each month from Roosevelt to Grand Avenues. It is the literal mecca for everything cutting edge creative in the Valley, from cuisine to painting and music. There are numerous phenomenal galleries in the area including Conspire and Counterculture, former Melrose district mainstay Revolver Records made the recent move to 2nd Street and Roosevelt, but the most renowned typically serve both great grubbage along with something to tap your foot to. Despite the influx of restaurants as the downtown art district attained its notoriety, Carly's, across the street from Revolver, still remains the top Mediterranean bistro in the area, and who could argue with incredible red pepper hummus, draft Chimey and savory sounds from proprietors of blues, jazz and experimental electronic. The Lost Leaf is another popular haunt just down the way on 5th Street a block south of Roosevelt, always dependable for putting on some of the best up-and-coming local groups and featuring the best bottled beer selection downtown, including Hunter S. Thompson's Gonzo Porter by Colorado's Flying Dog Brewery, a near 10% pv "right of passage" with nearly double the alcohol of a piss ass Bud Lite. It's an acquired taste but boy does it do the trick!

If your going to have any chance to make it to Tempe you have to resist the temptation to stop off near the sports complexes further downtown, or their affiliated bars and grills including Majerle's and Stoudemire's. Keep momentum heading eastward over the beautifully manmade Tempe Town Lake to the notorious Mill Avenue, catalyst for a sound that captivated the nation in the mid-90's from groups like the Refreshments and the Gin Blossoms, and while the music has all but left the strip, the top notch choices for all else are still in abundance along with the hotties at places like the innuendo laden Cherry Lounge, the beautifully scantily clad sorority specimens on display at The Library, but there's a reason why the Four Peaks Brewery spans over two stories, because it houses some of the best locally brewed beer in the entire nation, including Kiltlifter the Scottish-Style Ale that made them famous, amongst various other delicious brews that will make you forget all about the overly glorified Heineken.

As you approach your last stop at the head of Mesa, if any efforts can still be mustered a fantastic pool hall named a New Times Best Of Phoenix Winner, Main Street Billiards sits right at the tail end of the train tracks and stays open way past last call into the early evening. Although that is a time you really need to be on the train headed back to your final destination if your looking to meet someone, because it turns into a legitimate meat market for the happy, drunken hookup. A perfect end to a fervent evening of painting the town red in style along the light rail, the best part being the cost of the entire experience. Granted whatever you drop at each stop is all on you, but just getting around over ther course of the evening runs a whole lot cheaper than taking a cab or driving. Even if you assemble a group of homies together to throw down and pop it off, it's still a cheaper and safer option for an evening out with a bunch of frazzled friends. Someone would have to stay sober and it would still be mor expensive to make an appearance at the assortment of places you could see on the light rail for a measly $3.50 for unlimited rides the entire evening, likely less than what is spent on a drink at most places. It becomes increasingly difficult to argue with that logic in this day and age, so take the plunge, do something different and have an adventure on the Metro light rail. It's the closest you'll get to the NYC without the assholes.

It should comes as no surprise that people all across the United States love them some fireworks! In our society explosions and car chases are just as much American staples as apple pie and vanilla ice cream (rockets red glared...the bombs bursting in air), so it makes complete sense to blow shit up at a madly grandiose scale every year in remembrance of our nation's independence from the villain Great Britain. Since it's one of the best reasons to celebrate the entire year there are an obvious host of festive festivities to partake in all around the Phoenix metro area both on Fourth Of July itself and in the days leading up to it as well, all offering up a diverse dose of explosions in the sky.

The east valley is one of the first to jump into the foray with downtown Mesa's Arizona Celebration of Freedom, a free, two day event held the Friday and Saturday before the Fourth Of July up and down Main Street. This year the "coolest independence festival in the state" dates of July 2 and 3 conveniently lead directly into the holiday itself, providing a proper precursor filled with classic cars, beer gardens, an art walk, street performers and live music on a main stage in front of the nationally recognized Mesa Arts Center. Day one kicks off on Friday with a Motorcycle Parade on Main just before 6 pm followed by live jazz and blues along with patriotic performances from Heritage Academy and Heritage Festival Choir. The following day features American Iron cars filling the streets, more fantastic music and performances before flaming fireworks bring the entire evening to a culmination just before 10 pm. Also keep an eye out for the foxy Phoenix Pin-Up Dolls, a non profit group of USO style pin-up type models that will be posing for pictures and accepting contributions that go toward custom care packages for US Troops, no doubt be sending cheer the world over. For a complete schedule of attractions scope out their detailed web site at www.azcelebrationoffreedom.org

For those in the heart of the city, midtown Phoenix is the ultimate destination on Independence Day as tens of thousands flock to Steele Indian School Park at Third Street and Indian School Road for the 25th annual Freedom Wireless Fabulous Phoenix Fourth. From 6 to 10:00pm enjoy at no charge local entertainment featuring two stages of music, various food and beverage pushers (although due to the family/children element, alcohol is unfortunately prohibited at the event), and thankfully a giant misting area along with the

Robert Plant Finds New Life With The Hangman's Daughter

BY JAIME EN FUEGO

It's a challenge to stay personally true when everyone else is telling you what to do. That was the dilemma facing the legitimately legendary Robert Plant, monumental lead vocalist of arguably the greatest rock and roll band of all time, an almighty bunch known to the world as LED ZEPPELIN, architects of the template for heavy rock used by bands still to this day.

Unlike the Stones, who will probably cart themselves out of retirement homes on respirators to take every penny from every person they can, Zep retained the same four core musicians for all nine records, and when the band's rhythmic anchor, skin smasher extraordinaire John Bonham died suddenly and notoriously by asphyxiating on his own vomit after 40 shots of vodka, they immediately threw in the towel. After the eponymous group finally decided to reunite, rehearse and play a full-length set for the first time in nearly 30 years during a one off gig at London's O2 Arena in honor of the Turkish born Atlantic Records founder Ahmet Ertegün, who signed LED ZEPPELIN to their first major label deal, every Zep fan on the entire planet was in a fervent frenzy along with the entire music industry to see what the classic rock heroes could conjure.

Millions had hung on to hopes of a proper reunion for decades, especially after two previous, obviously rushed short sets went rather disastrously, but Bonham's son Jason had blossomed into quite a monstrous drummer himself, even playing on the second short setlist, which only served to pour more fuel on the fires of fan's hopes. Over 2 million people signed up for a lottery which was distributing less than 20,000 tickets, showing the immense interest and when the gig went over to unanimous critical praise, superstar guitarist/producer Jimmy Page, who played with Eric Clapton in The Yardbirds before forming Zeppelin in the late 60's, mentioned to the press his desires of a full-fledged tour and recording a new album with the band. Understandably, the excitement boiled over into sheer pandemonium. There was just one problem... the singer had no interest in the project.

During Robert Plant's years away from Zeppelin his musical leanings had changed considerably, most notably evidenced on 2007's Raising Sand, a collection of collaborations with bluegrass vocalist Alison Krauss. A critical and commercial success, it moved over a million copies and snagged a slew of Grammy awards, including Album of the Year for Nashville songwriter/producer T-Bone Burnett, who recently worked wonders on Crazy Heart, and Record of the Year for the duo's cover of "Please Read The Letter," a song from Page & Plant's only solo release of new material, 98's often forgotten Walking Into Clarksdale. If the Zeppelin reunion had taken places at another time, it's anyone's guess what might have transpired. In reality, the two events practically coincided. Turning down the chance of going on an all out global stadium tour that would have made him more money than he had ever seen in the group's 70's heyday. Plant followed his heart instead of his pocketbook and went on an intimate American trek with an unestablished act, much to the chagrin of the rest of Zeppelin.

Page and bassist/organist John Paul Jones threatened to pursue the project anyway, even auditioning numerous new vocalists, only promising that they wouldn't call themselves LED ZEPPELIN. Predictably, no replacement was up to their standards and after Jones found an outlet for his vicarious youthful rocking by forming Them Crooked Vultures with the grunge-leaning Josh Homme and Dave Grohl, Jimmy Page's manager was quoted last year in the press saying that "the whole thing is completely over now." Meanwhile, Plant is stronger than ever and about to hit the road in the United States this summer with his newest/oldest group Band of Joy, an act he had originally formed before even joining Zeppelin.

So when Plant stops in Phoenix at the Dodge Theater on July 20 it's certainly a show not be missed, even if it is more "Tangerine" than "Communication Breakdown."

3 STEPS FROM SANITY BRING BRUTAL BEAUTY TO HEAVY METAL

Sex appeal is undeniable! The music industry has long used it to entice listeners to check out some all too often god awful tunes which possessed no real redeeming creative value just a desirable face behind it. We're talking sheer eye candy here, nothing else whatsoever, if anyone besides me is plagued by remembrances of T.A.T.U.?! With a brief glance or listen one might mistakenly assume far from the truth that the powerful female fronted Glendale, Arizona group 3 Steps From Sanity have followed in the same footsteps of many metal bands in the recent decade, emulating pop groups in desperation for a distinctive cliché' to portray and differentiate themselves from the massive similar masses swarming their respective gene pool.

But notably unlike watered down forerunners to the female throne of the modern metal movement like Century Media's Billboard invading Lacuna Coil or the multi-platinum Evanescence, there is no obvious sacrifice of necessary heaviness made by 3 Steps From Sanity in order to properly equate a softer voice or appeal to a more mainstream demographic. The music is still venomous and vicious, perfectly counteracting the emotive vocal styles which occasionally remit to a relentless roar as well, but only in the most importantly poignant portions of the arrangement.

The opener of the multifaceted 3 Steps From Sanity debut album Admission rather plainly titled "Hypocrisy" perfectly displays the band's dueling ways in blistering fashion, with a malicious riff courtesy of virtuoso sole guitarist David Dragen, followed by a smoothly haunting vocal line from sensational centerpiece singer Eve Flohrschutz. From there onward songs raise the gamut, but especially the sprawling and amazing "Life's Repetition" which incorporates aspects of thrash, death and industrial with an ultimate operatic classical feel as the rhythm section of drummer Josh Bounds and bassist Jacob Yoon keep closely knit the entire enormous and progressive piece.

3 Steps From Sanity actually do a phenomenal job of not succumbing to the trappings of many popular bands beloved in my home of Stockholm which unlike America and the rest of the world, loves the dangling of a sexy piece of meat in front of the already rabid legions of mostly male headbangers at a heavy rock concert. in order to amass more interest in their music. From vocalists and bassists to keyboards and pianists, a wide variety is featured making it tough to determine which of many groups might be making an effort to compensate for lacking ability musically. Proving that they are far from one trick ponies 3 Steps From Sanity have long been showing the merit of their message for any doubters at local metal haunts like the Big Fish Pub in Tempe, Club Mardi Gras in Scottsdale, and various shows at the notorious Club Red near the Tempe/Mesa border where the group celebrated their debut CD release party late this last year. The record rages with a certain aggression confirming that you don't always need corpse painted singers and guitarists with cold Euro blood running in their veins to make a great metal band.

Stayed tuned to 3 STEPS FROM SANITY's Facebook music page for information on upcoming live performances and an opportunity to witness a band from the desert that holds its own with the masters from Europe.

GenitalConsensus

BY DR. SUSAN MAY

If you've ever wondered what sexually stimulates a woman or how to tell if she is turned on, from her genital state, recent research may shed some light on the mystery. An international study headed by Canadian Professor Meredith Chivers suggests there may be a split between women's bodies and minds. Whereas a man's erection will accurately reflect his mental turn on, a woman can be mentally turned on without experiencing strong genital arousal.

Researchers exposed both heterosexual and homosexual men and women to various sexual stimuli, while measuring genital arousal by tracking changes in blood flow to the penis or vagina. Participants watched video clips of naked men and women in a variety of situations: exercising, masturbating, engaging in heterosexual intercourse, as well as men having sex with men and women having sex with women. They also watched footage of bonobo apes mating, and control (neutral) footage of landscapes. Participants reported their subjective arousal, how turned on they felt watching each clip.

For men, there was a direct correlation between arousal and erection, for women, not always. A woman can think a person, situation or image is hot, and her genital response will not reflect it, which can make it very confusing for a partner trying to arouse her.

Human sexual arousal and desire are complex, dynamic functions of mental, emotional and physiological processes, raising questions about the link between sexual desire (the subjective state of sexual interest and passion) and arousal (physical excitement) in women. In men, the connection is straightforward. Men are not physically aroused by stimuli that are not also a mental turn-on. For instance, straight men in the study were not aroused by clips of gay male sex. Women, however, exhibited some unexpected responses, including the fact that heterosexual women were more aroused by clips of women having sex with women, or nude women masturbating, than by images of nude men exercising, masturbating or having heterosexual intercourse.

As a sex therapist, I'm musing on the implications. The good news, for men, is if your female partner isn't instantly aroused by your nudity or erection, don't take it personally. Physical sexual arousal can happen more slowly for women, triggered more by the sex act, not by mental anticipation or visual titillation, suggesting the short cut to arousing your partner may be to commence lovemaking and let her awaken in the process. Or if you want to get her wet more quickly during foreplay, consider popping a girl-girl porn film in the DVD player and watching it together. And, guys, don't waste your energy trying to excite women at the gym by pumping iron or showing off your bulging biceps. In the study, women were more aroused by images of bonobo apes mating than clips of men exercising. Go figure.

When a man deeply cares for a woman he does not think twice about protecting her or providing for her.

He often protects her in a way that woman do not understand, like making sure her car is safe to drive, checking to be sure she has proper air in her tires or he has changed the oil in her car.

Men protect their woman when they pull onto the freeway and pay attention to the oncoming traffic and not listen to her "conversation". Men are single focus and most woman do not understand what this means. Women think he is not listening to her on purpose, ignoring her important sharing. Women need to understand that single focus means when there is something important a man is doing be it merging with traffic, working on his computer or in his man cave; he does not Hear You! If it is potentially a dangerous situation, like getting on and off freeways, his DNA takes over. This is an expression of biological instinctual encoding, to protect the ones he loves.

In 2010, men protect in more subtle ways. How men protected women use to be more obvious; like rescuing her from a band of marauding bandits or engaging in a sword fight, or shooting a bear. Women do not get that you men will die for us. I mean this literally. When I speak this in a group of men and women the men are shaking their heads yes and the women have a stunned expression on their faces. They don't get it. Because our world has become so "civilized" (which is questionable!), few women realize that bad guys still have guns and knives and your man would die to protect you or step in front of a car and push you out of the way.

How about providing for your woman? Women work, earn as much or more then their men, can stand on their own two feet and don't need the help of any man. This has been the battle cry since the women's lib movement. Now that sounds really inviting for a man doesn't it. He is not needed! Throw out his DNA primal instincts to provide and protect and what kind of a relationship does that offer him? NONE! An alpha man is not interested in a relationship with a woman who does not know how to be in her feminine: receptive creative. That does not mean she has to be weak and helpless. On the contrary, a strong man desires a strong woman; and one who can appreciate all the little things he does to provide and protect her. A man needs to feel needed, appreciated and not taken advantage of.

Men who are comfortable in their skins and not acting out little boy scenarios will put their woman first, especially in the bedroom. Helping their beloved have an orgasm or many is what makes them feel fantastic, like their team just won the grand championship.

Showing appreciation is simple. Men can tell when a woman respects them and is sincere in her pride of being his woman. It is in how she speaks to him. Is there respect in her voice? How she touches him when others are looking. How she brags about the little things he does for her. She says thank you. She wears the necklace or earrings he bought for her. She acknowledges how beautiful the flowers are that he brought home to her, more then once!

The most important thing a woman can do to get her needs met is to rejoice in his masculinity, as it is different than a woman's, Thank God. Rejoice and cup his package as often as you can and coo to him how much you love his manhood. There is not a man alive that would not die for a woman who understands that his "manhood" is the key to his sense of self. Appreciate it and him often.

Bottom line, a man thrives on Intimacy, Sex, Appreciation and Respect.

It was 4th of July weekend and there were tons of parties going on and plenty of things to do. This guy I was fucking asked if I wanted to join him and some of his pals down the river. I didn't really have anything else going on, so I agreed. I was wearing my bright pink string bikini that tied on the sides and I swept my red hair into a ponytail. When we got there I noticed that, not only were there about 10 guys and two other girls besides me, but they were all hot!

We started tubing like usual. With an extra raft for the ice chest and goodies, I was drinking a beer with the rest of them when one of the other girls started complaining about having tan lines. I figured this would be a great time to liven-up this dull party so I told her not to bother with them and I took off my own top. The boys, being boys, started drooling and whispering to each other while staring at my tits. The water was still cold and for some reason there weren't very many people on the river with us, and those that were on the river just ignored us. The other girls got the hint and took their tops off as well.

The guy I was fucking started getting frisky and so did the other guys. Well, I've never been one for sleeping with my man's friends, unless my man offers, of course, so when one of his friends tried to join in I pushed him away. There was another young couple floating down the river but they were too engrossed with each other's tonsils to notice what was about to happen. The other two girls didn't mind who was on them, so my boy-toy and I watched while they were groped and slobbered on by the other 10 boys. It was one hell of a porno gang bang right in front of us.

The blonde had two guys sucking on one boob each while making out with another and being fingered by another and the same went with the other red head. Well I got turned on like no other, so I undid my bikini bottoms and threw them into the extra raff with the beer and chips. My man jumped on top of me, almost knocking me over, and started to pound me while we watched the others get it on. They took the hint from that and before we knew it both girls were being fucked, fingered and groped by the boys.

The blonde even had one guy fucking her in the ass, another eating her out, two underneath her as she was doggie styled on the tube and sucking another's dick. Very interesting!! I couldn't get a great view so I turned on my side and had one leg under his ass and the other placed over his shoulder. He kept pounding on my G-spot. and within minutes I was cumming all over his dick. The other two girls started screaming in delight and then they were sprayed with thick white juice from the boys.

Once everyone was done, it was easy just to wash-up in the dirty river water. We continued the rest of the way down the river, with our suits on, eating and drinking and nobody really said a word about the fuck fest that occurred earlier. My fuck buddy and I drove back to my place while the rest of the group went to go do something else...probably continue with their sexual escapades. Next time I go tubing, I'm taking a camera!!

STUDIO: VIVID ENTERTAINMENT DIRECTOR: ALEX BRAUN

BATMAN XXX: A PORN PARODY is a a fun and fanciful romp into the world of old television. Since its inception, the DC comic book character Batman has become entwined into the very fabric of American culture. This movie is no different, while creating some very hot erotica, director Axel Braun, has not only embraced the characters but kept real close to it's roots. Now don't get me wrong, this isn't your Chris Nolan, Tim Burton dark and moody Batman. This is the swinging sixties smooth player Batman. The one that the older of us readers remember from the short lived TV show in the 60's. Mr. Braun has embraced it in all it's hokey glory.

Dale Dabone's performance as Batman is simply amazing, and much more restrained than I imagined. You can tell he spent alot of time working on Adam West's distinctive voice and mannerisms without exaggerating them. Likewise, James Deen conveys Robin's youthful and excitable ways, but avoids going too over the top. But all the camp and circumstance aside. There's plenty to enjoy for even the most discriminating viewer. The first sexual encounter involves Evan Stone doing it with Kimberly Kane while she's locked up in a cell. She blows him in between the bars, and then allows him inside for some hot straight screwing, which is followed by even hotter anal fucking. Alexis Texas as Molly is up next, and she almost steals the whole show in her team-up with Mr. Dabone. Close-ups of her face while blowing the Caped Crusader is every bit as pleasing as the medium shots of her bumping and grinding away on his cock. And when it comes to the climax, Alexis knows how to raise the value of a money shot by playing with and swallowing Dabone's Bat-cum. Andy San Dimas and Syren Sexton appear in matching outfits and are appropriately submissive as the Joker's carnal playmates. Their beauty equalled by the hot threesome with the Joker (played by Randy Spears). James Deen does it with Lexi Belle in an enjoyable one-on-one with good reverse cowgirl shots, though we are denied a facial. Yet as previously mentioned, that purple and yellow Batgirl outfit goes a long way in adding erotic value.

Finally, Catwoman, Tori Black gets menage a trois-ed by the Dynamic Duo, and of course, Miss Pretty Filthy never disappoints. They strip off her black outfit, and then Robin eats her out and bops her doggy-style while Batman gets his cock lapped up like a bowl of milk. Our heroes alternate in screwing her throat and pussy, until they release themselves all over her mouth. Always the tease, Catwoman rewards them by setting off a deadly trap, and the audience is asked to tune in, "same Bat-XXX time, same Bat-XXX channel."

Like most TV comedies of the sixties, BATMAN always looked like it was filmed on the set of some flashy and tacky musical variety show, with backgrounds made of cardboard and styrofoam, and props straight out of 9th grade woodshop class. Mr. Braun captures that visual style superbly even with (or perhaps as a result of) his obviously modest budget. Even more importantly, the show's peculiar brand of schtick is likewise brought to new life, and for this reason alone, BATMAN XXX shouldn't be missed. The opening animation sequence and the graphic sound effects ("Kapow!" and "Zlonk!" are used, but not "Splooge!) are nearly picture perfect. The familiar jazzy music score is astounding in its accuracy, and a slight variation of the universally known music theme will have you humming along. The fast-motion speeding away of the Batmobile, the Gotham City sign, celebrity cameo appearances (Ron Jeremy) and so many other elements contribute to a fun and fascinating viewing experience.

There is a perverse thrill in seeing costumed superheroines getting down and dirty on camera. If you have ever attended a comic book or sci-fi convention and gawked at all the Power Girls, Lara Crofts, Scarlett Witches, and Zatannas wandering about, BATMAN XXX may fulfill those dirty little fantasies still lurking in your mind. You'll see Batgirl in her mask greedily sucking on Mr. Deen's cock, and witness Catwoman getting down on all fours and shamelessly showing off her ass. These are visual indulgences which could never have existed back in the days of VHS cassettes when creativity and quality control in porn was at an all-time low. It's no wonder that parodies have become the latest craze of the adult industry.

The extra materials are entertaining, and supplement the main feature nicely. Still, I expected a bit more from a release this prolific (even the box-cover boasts this title as being "The most anticipated XXX parody of the year!) and was discouraged to find all the extras crammed on the same disc. Bonuses include a thirty minute Behind The Scenes documentary highlighted by brief interviews with Misses Black and Texas, as well as a Casting Calls video for the roles of Batman, Riddler and Joker. Also available is a photo slideshow, and a non-sex version of the movie. Quite frankly, I have limited use for a clean edit of BATMAN XXX, though the thirty minute flick could be regarded as a "missing" TV episode. The rest of the materials include trailers for other Vivid flicks, studio promos, and an anti-video piracy public service announcement (which stuck me as a bit smarmy, though accurate and valid).

CLUB¬PARTY¬EVENT¬&CONCERT Z O T O H Q

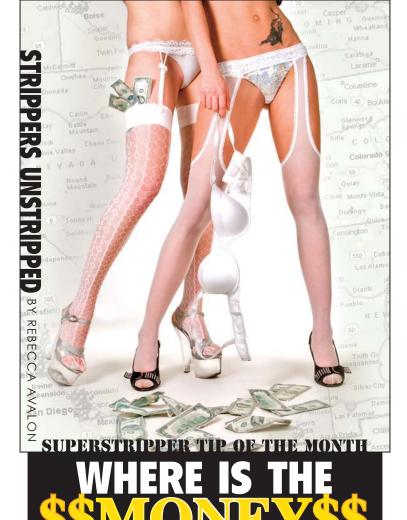

Last month we discussed whether or not it was "worth it" to travel and dance during the slow season. Since that article was published I have listened to a lot of conversations both in the dressing room and in online stripper forums and chat rooms. If you haven't found them yet, online forums like StripperWeb.com and ExoticDancernet.com are great places to network and communicate with like-minded dancers who are willing to invest their time and money towards improving their skills.

One forum conversation recently caught my eye. It was a typical post for this time of year from a relatively new dancer who wanted to know what city had "good money" right now because her club was slow. If you have been dancing for any amount of time, you probably understand that summertime is generally a slower season for most strip club markets. Although there may be lots of bachelor parties in May and June (since June is the most popular month for weddings) much of the business clientele is taking vacations and weekends off to spend time with their families. Since our industry thrives on business travelers, conventions, and corporate meetings (most of which is planned during Sept-May) summertime can be spotty. This is magnified even more in Arizona when the temperatures scare away most tourists, and locals flee the heat on the weekends.

So what should you do? Should you believe the banter in the locker room and book a trip to a different city and HOPE it lives up to the locker room hype? Well I have a few words of wisdom if you find yourself getting caught up in one of those locker room or forum conversations

- 1. If you are in the locker room, no matter what you "hear" about a particular city in another state it's usually exaggerated. This is especially if the person telling you is drunk and/or exhausted at the end of a bad shift.
- 2. If you take that information from the drunk girl in the locker room, and then go onto an online forum to ask about that particular city... someone from that town will respond "no it's bad here too!" because she doesn't want her club overrun with traveling dancers.
- 3. If you are a top earner in your home club, or are working on becoming a top earner with the information you have learned in DancerWealth... are you comfortable leaving your home club and NOT having the social capital you worked so hard to establish? You know first hand that the support staff in the club will hook up their regular girls first.
- 4. There is no Magical Club that is super packed on a Tuesday night in July with guys just ready open up their wallets and go to VIP. If there was, you can be sure it's not going to be public information on a free stripper forum.

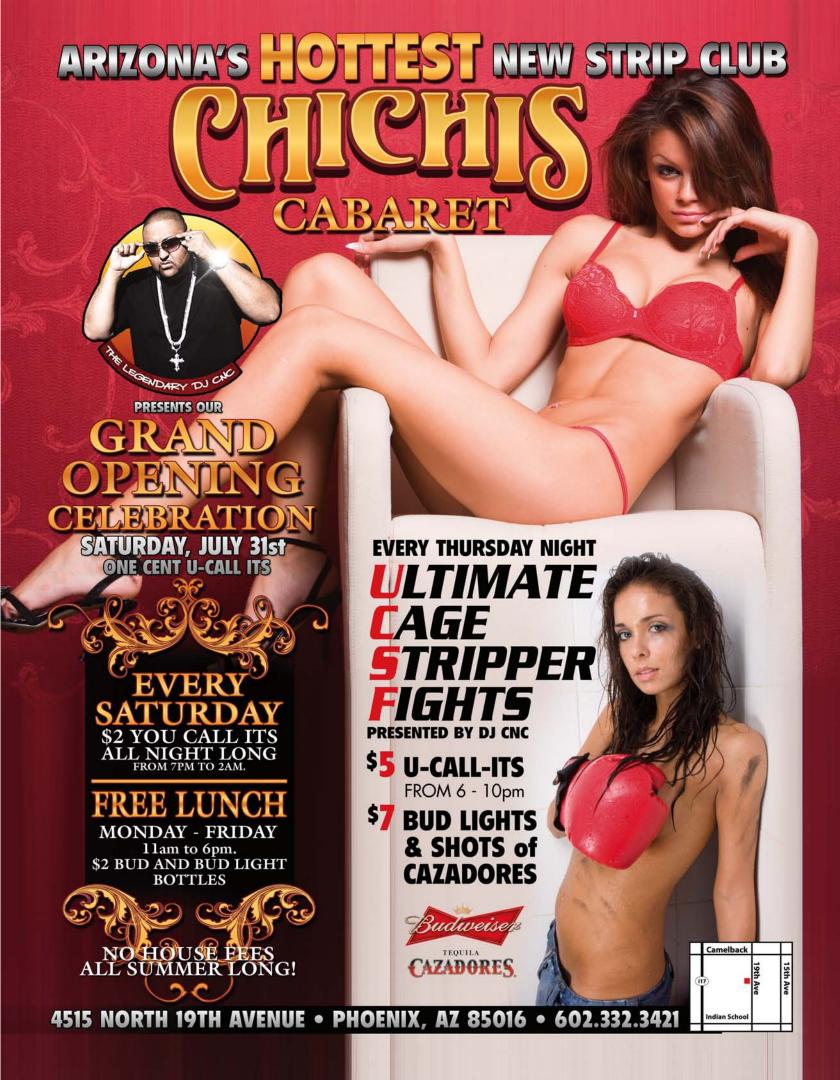

Here at Strip and grow Rich, we do have a few strategies to help you get through the typically Slow Summer Season...ready?

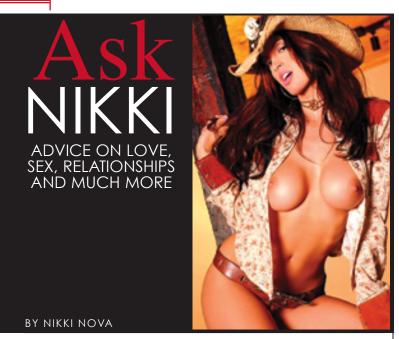

The first and probably most effective is to remember to Maintain Your SuperStripper Zone when you are working in your club. In order to control your money, you have to be able to control your emotions. If you aren't able to control your emotions, you will end up in a negative spiral. Have you ever done this: suppose someone says something that you can normally brush off...but for some reason you make a bigger deal out of it? Then after a while you get to the point where you are so negative that you are not able to identify the money making opportunities when they present themselves? Negative emotions like feeling frustrated, disappointed, or angry are normal reactions but if you just feel that way and don't take action on the message those emotions are trying to tell you...you will not make money! Isn't that why you are in the strip club in the first place? In DancerWealth we teach you strategies on how to identify and control these negative emotions and STOP that negative spiral before it starts.

Second, if you decide that you DO want to get out of town and try a new club, but you want to minimize your travel costs and be sure to work at a nice club...consider SuperStripper Boot Camp. We have relocated to Dallas, Texas and will be holding events this summer to help you hone your SuperStripper Skills while making money at night. The Dallas economy has held up pretty well during the current recession, and even though summertime is still considered to be "slow" in Dallas, it is rockin' in comparison to other cities.

Finally, if you just need a vacation but want to use that time productively, we have a fun 5 day/4 night SuperStripper Cruise planned for mid July. The cruise's port city is New Orleans, so you have the option to work in NOLA either before or after the event. While onboard you can relax, make new friends, catch some rays, explore a tropical island and learn new Superstripper sales skills to ROCK the club when you get home refreshed and recharged.

For more information sign up for our newsletter at http://www.stripandgrowrich.com. Once you sign up you will also receive our free report on how to create and stay in the SuperStripper Zone to make more money every time you work.

Hello everyone. I am Nikki Nova, adult model & film star, and Playboy TV host. I have been in the adult business for 13 years and counting. Throughout those years I have experienced a vast array of characters, situations, relationships and yes, some "sexspiriments" along the way. All of these things have given me a certain amount of wisdom in specific areas and subjects of life that I had absolutely no idea what I was going to do with until now. I am here for you to ask any questions that you may have on sex, dating and/or relationships. I will give you advice based on my own experiences and those of my friends and co-workers. Mind you my co-workers are porn stars, centerfolds, and yes even ladies of a certain timeless profession. I may not be a Dr. but I do have a naughty nurses outfit or two and a nice big velvet sofa for you to lay back on and confide in me while I play therapist so ask away...xo.

Nikki please help! My name is Vanessa and I am frustrated as hell! I started dating a guy a few months ago that is great in many ways. I mean it's a little too soon to tell yet because even though we have been dating a few months, we only see each other every few weeks because we live in different states. We will be living in the same state within the next 2 months though so it's not as bad as it sounds. Anyways that's not the problem. The problem is that he has never gone down on me. I mean he is very quick to expect me and ask me to suck his dick and tells me what he wants all the time but he has never gone down on me. I know there is nothing wrong with me down there because every relationship I have ever been in has always been great in that department. I mean my last boyfriend would do it for hours if I let him so...what the hell? I mean at first I thought maybe he was just grossed out by it but it's not that because he loves to lick my ass. It turns HIM on to do so. That's the thing though. I'm starting to wonder if he is just a selfish lover... or possibly even a selfish person in the relationship department in some ways. He is great and communication (which is rare for a guy right?) but so many things about our relationship seem to work only because I am so wiling to put my heart and myself out there for him and not expect too much from him in return. Going down on me though? I mean come on! - Vanessa

Vanessa- you seem to have answered your own question. He is a selfish man in many ways including the sex department. You seem to be ok with everything except the fact that he won't go down on you. If that is the case then you need to speak up and say something immediately. I will say this though, if it's only been a few months and you are already seeing that this man is this selfish then what do you suppose he will be like a year from now? I mean you're right. It IS too soon to tell. I think that a lot will be revealed when you guys are living closer to each other and are around each other more. You're question and your situation is very close to my heart because I myself am in a similar relationship/situation. We as women Vanessa are natural nurturers, givers, and loving, supportive people. It is so often the women that gives too much of herself in any relationship and yes of course some men to do but lets face it folks it's the woman that does so 90% of the time. When people give too much of themselves away then they lose who they are. It's important to be a "little" selfish. Ask for what you want Vanessa. Being satisfied sexually is so important to any relationship. If you aren't satisfied at 3 months then you might want to consider that before wasting too much more time in a one-sided relationship.

My name is Travis and I love blowjobs. All men love blowjobs. That's normal right? Well Nikki getting my girlfriend of 8 months to suck my dick is like getting a stranger to hand me 1,000 bucks. It's retarded and annoying. She thinks it's "gross" yet she sure doesn't mind getting head in return. That ain't the only problem. The 6 times that she HAS sucked my dick she sucks at it! I try to tell her what I like and she gets pissed if I say anything because in her mind I should just be happy that she's putting it anywhere near her mouth in the first place. What do I do? - Travis Travis hahahahaha. I HAD to post this question in the same issue as another question I got from a girl named Vanessa. Read my response to her and then email me and perhaps I will send you two on a date with each other. LOL. Ok now on a serious note you've got to grab your balls and tell her that as a man you need this and she needs to understand that. It's not like you're asking her for threesomes or other women, or anything even the slightest bit unusual, She needs to stop being so selfish and she also needs to understand that in any relationship the people have got to be able to tell each other how they like things and the other person has to care enough to make an effort to please that person. If they don't, or are not willing to, then it's basically like saying that they don't care enough about the other person's happiness. If that's the case then Travis, you need to ditch her and find someone worthy.... period (possibly Vanessa?) haha.

HELP!!! My boyfriend's dick is crooked. I'm not talking about curved. I'm talkin' straight up, jacked up fucking crooked as hell and it HURTS every time we have sex. I love my boyfriend but I literally dread sex 90% of the time because we can only have sex in one position that it doesn't hurt and after 2 years of that same fucking position, I'm losing my mind! At first I could overlook it because he was a good boyfriend but he's not even that anymore. He is cold and never there for me emotionally, he's emotionally abusive and I think I'm just scared. I'm scared of walking away from him and never finding anyone again because I'm so odd and honestly a really hard fit in many ways. He and it fit in all of those odd ways. We just don't fit physically I guess. I finally brought up his dick issue and he swears that all girls he's ever been with love it and there's probably just something wrong with me. wtf? Is that true do you think? - Anonymous

Well my darling "Anonymous" this question is pretty retardedly close to home for me as well. It reminds me so much of a past relationship scenario of mine that I almost wonder if it's a friend of mine writing this in...But whatever. The bottom line is that since I do have some very real experience in this area that I know a lot about this kind of thing. It depends on WHY and HOW his dick is curved. Is it straight when it's soft but curved when it's hard? If so then it could be a cartilage issue or even a bad circumcision. Sometimes exercises can help that involve stretching and molding. There are also surgeries that can also help but they are not guaranteed and there are risks involved. Big ones like not being able to get or maintain an erection. His statement about how most girls really liked it a lot and that there must be something wrong with you is only him being an insecure piece of shit and trying to make you feel bad. That's probably the reason for his coldness as well. It's his own form of self preservation. It's got to be hard on him as a man to be in such an awful preDICKament (tee hee) but he is not handling it like a man at all and you can't stay in a relationship with an abusive little boy. It's July. The month of independence. Cut all unhealthy relationships. people and things away from you and gain some freedom and the opportunities that come along with that freedom. Someone once said to me that you can't reach out for something new when your hands are full holding onto the past. Move on.

READER SUBMITTED STORIES EDITOR'S NOTE: THE NAMES HAVE EITHER BEEN CHANGED OR REMOVED TO PROTECT THE IDENTITIES OF THOSE INVOLVED

I introduce myself to Stephanie, who is beyond hot! She was far hotter than Erica and I'm trying not to show it so I can keep this a 2-girl experience. I invite them in and ask if they would like something to drink. Erica chimes in with, "OJ would be great, it goes very well with this" as she hold's up her right hand and at about eye level I see a small pill with the "Batman" symbol embossed into the face. So let's digest this for one second, techno + small pills with a "batman" symbol embossed into it. This sure sounds like something is about to go down. "OJ?" I asked, playing somewhat dumb, you never want to look too experienced in the beginning guys. Let them feel like they are teaching you something, it massages their ego and becomes a lesson. I love teachers. Anyway, "OJ and some "Vicks" would do us right" says Erica and I can see Stephanie nod her head out of the corner of my eye in acceptance. "You got it, two OJ's and a gallon of "Vicks" coming right up." So now I'm walking to the kitchen thinking, "I hope I have OJ!" I open the refrigerator and there sits a gallon of OJ, with nothing more than a single glass left in it. "FUCK!" I curse under my breath, this is not good. Any ingredient not available jeopardizes the chance of this thing goin' down. Quickly I begin to come up with alternatives but they just don't cut it. I have to go to the store. I cannot believe that I have to go to the store right now! I walk back to the living room to inform them of my dilemma. "Ok, so it looks like I am very low in the OJ department, who wants to ride with me to the store, it's not far?" They looked at each other like I just told them their dog just died. Erica, who has obviously taken on the roll of spokesperson for the two, says, "Can we just sit in your bedroom and wait for you?" Does this girl just know what to say?

So, I'm driving to the store, my hands are calloused from holding the wheel too tight, with visions of what I'm about to become entangled in. Erica and Stephanie, together with me right there in the fucking middle! It felt like just hit the jackpot in Vegas baby! The trip to the store seemed to fly by or maybe it's because I didn't obey one speed limit on my way, either way, I'm now standing in the cold section of the store at staring at OJ at 3AM. "With pulp or without" I ask myself. Both. I grab four gallons, two of each and walk to the registers at the front of the store. The cashier is a young female but I can see it in her eyes. She knows what this is for. Not one word was spoken between the two of us other than her petite voice saying, "sixteen dollars and twenty six cents Sir." I use my card and off I run out of the store, after all they are at MY house waiting on MY BED hopefully doing bad things and with a little luck, catch them as I walk in!

I arrive back at my pad and quickly make my way to my bedroom. I open the door and there sits Erica and Stephanie with these sad faces. "What's up? I got the OJ" Erica looks at Stephanie and says "We accidently dropped Batman and Robin in the toilet. All we have left is the Joker. I can call my friend Kris though! Kris will stay and party with us too!" The game just stepped itself up people! Three women and me together doing it like rock stars? "YES!" I velled "Call Kris" Erica grabs her cell phone and sends Kris a text message and after a few minutes receives a text back. "Kris wants to bring a few dancers with, is that cool?" "Cool? Um very cool, send em over" "Done" says Erica. The clock seems to stop as we waited for Kris to show up with her team of dancers. An hour goes by and the doorbell rings. Nice! They are here. I send Erica to the door since she know her. Stephanie and I are now alone in my bedroom and she hasn't said a single word since she got here and it's freaking me out a little right now but before I could give much thought to it, my bedroom door opens and in walks Erica and about 5 GUYS! "Um, who, um whoa" I mumbled. Erica points to one of the guys and says, "Mike, this is CHRIS"

"Get out! Get out Get out!" I scream at the top of my lungs and point at the door. The whole lot of them get up and start for the door. I catch a quick glance at Erica and the expression on her face was pure terror as she ran from my house.

Moral to the story? I hate the name Chris/Kris!

We all remember when we were kids the magazine "Highlights". I know that for my friends and I, our favorite section was always the "Hidden Pictures" eye teaser! We would spend hours gazing into a trance looking for something that wasn't supposed to be! For those of you who don't remember this, I'm sure you've seen the video games on the tabletop at almost every local, hole in the wall bar in this great nation. Well, not to be left in the dust, we've decided to make this an ongoing feature in Playtime! The answers will be revealed in the following months issue! #### One Son of a Bitch!

The parish priest went on a fishing trip. On the last day of his trip he hooked a monster fish and proceeded to reel it in. The guide, holding a net, yelled, "Look at the size of that Son of a Bitch!"

"Son, I'm a priest. Your language is uncalled for!"

"No, Father, that's what kind of fish it is – a Son of a Bitch fish!"

"Really? Well then, help me land this Son of a Ritch!"

Once in the boat, they marvelled at the size of the monster.

"Father, that's the biggest Son of a Bitch I've ever seen"

"Yes, it is a big Son of a Bitch.. What should I do with it?"

"Why, eat it! Of course. You've never tasted anything as good as Son of a Bitch!"

Elated, the priest headed home to the rectory. While unloading his gear & his prize catch, Sister Mary inquired about his trip.

"Take a look at this big Son of a Bitch I caught!"

Sister Mary gasped & clutched her rosary, "Father!"

"It's OK, Sister. That's what kind of fish it is, a Son of a Bitch fish!"

"Oh, well then, what are you going to do with that big Son of a Bitch?"

Sister Mary informed the priest that the new Bishop was scheduled to visit in a few days and that they should fix the Son of a Bitch for his dinner.

"I'll even clean the Son of a Bitch," she said. As she was cleaning the huge fish, the Friar walked in.

"What are you doing Sister?"

"Father wants me to clean this big Son of a Bitch for the new Bishop's Dinner"

"Sister! I'll clean it if you're so upset! Please watch your language!"

"No, no, no, it's called a Son of a Bitch Fish."

"Really? Well, in that case, I'll fix up a great meal to go with it, and that Son of a Bitch can be the main course! Let me know when you've finished cleaning that Son of a Bitch."

On the night of the new Bishop's visit, everything was perfect. The Friar had prepared an excellent meal. The wine was fine, and the fish was excellent

The new Bishop said, "This is great fish, where did you get it?"

"I caught that Son of a Bitch!" proclaimed the proud priest.

"And I cleaned the Son of a Bitch!" exclaimed the Sister

The Friar added," And I prepared the Son of a Bitch, using a special recipe! The new Bishop looked around at each of them. A big smile crept across his face as he said, "You fuckers are my kind of people."

"Well it all started when my wife and I were golfing and by accident she hit the ball into a cow field. When we went to investigate, I saw the ball in a cow's ass. I went and lifted the tail of the cow and that's when I made my mistake." Puzzled, the doctor asks "What mistake was that?" Tiger replies, "I said 'Hey this looks like yours honey!
